As the above chart shows, tweet id and rating numerator are positively correlated. This indicates that, as the author tweeted more often, the higher the rating became. This could be due to the fact that a high numerator became more characteristic of the twitter user and thus became more of a signature

Also, favorite count and retweet count are extremely positively correlated. Favorite and tweet counts are also positively correlated with tweet_id, suggesting that tweets increased in popularity with the passage of time/tweets.